(b) how many companies have sought shareholders' approval for such preferential allotments through postal ballot mechanism and through general body meeting;

(c) whether Government is contemplating to stop this method of preferential allotment to promoters through postal allotment as it hurts the small investors whose value of share gets diluted;

.(d) whether Government has any plans to do so; and

(e) if so, by when; and if not, the reasons therefor?

THE MINISTER OF CORPORATE AFFAIRS (SHRI PREM CHAND GUPTA): (a)and (b) The information is being collected and will be laid on the Table of the House.

(c) As per provisions of section 81 (1 A) of the Companies Act, 1956, further shares can be offered by a company to any person(s) (whether existing members or not), in any manner, if the company passes a special resolution to this effect, or, if the company passes an ordinary resolution and obtains Government approval thereto. Allotment of shares made in such manner to a select group of persons and not to public at large is also termed as preferential allotment.

In terms of provisions of section 192A of the Companies Act, 1956, a listed company may voluntarily pass resolutions under section 81 (1 A) of the Companies Act, 1956 for preferential allotment by way of postal ballot.

Further, SEBI (Disclosure & Investor Protection) Guidelines, 2000 regulate various aspects of preferential allotment by listed companies such as pricing of the issue, currency of financial instruments, non-transferability of financial instruments, the validity period of shareholders' resolution etc.

Since the price at which shares are offered in a preferential allotment by a listed company, is fixed as per SEBI Guidelines, there is a regulatory safeguard against the value of shares held by small investors being selectively devalued.

(d) and (e) The mechanism of postal ballot enables wider shareholder participation in the company resolutions. Such participation would make the decision taken by such resolution more democratic. In view of this, there is no proposal to do away with this method of ascertaining the consent of shareholders. In case of any oppression and mismanagement by the company, the aggrieved minority shareholders may approach the Company Law Board for relief under section 397/398, read with section 399 of the Companies Act, 1956.
